

Early Journal Content on JSTOR, Free to Anyone in the World

This article is one of nearly 500,000 scholarly works digitized and made freely available to everyone in the world by JSTOR.

Known as the Early Journal Content, this set of works include research articles, news, letters, and other writings published in more than 200 of the oldest leading academic journals. The works date from the mid-seventeenth to the early twentieth centuries.

We encourage people to read and share the Early Journal Content openly and to tell others that this resource exists. People may post this content online or redistribute in any way for non-commercial purposes.

Read more about Early Journal Content at <http://about.jstor.org/participate-jstor/individuals/early-journal-content>.

JSTOR is a digital library of academic journals, books, and primary source objects. JSTOR helps people discover, use, and build upon a wide range of content through a powerful research and teaching platform, and preserves this content for future generations. JSTOR is part of ITHAKA, a not-for-profit organization that also includes Ithaka S+R and Portico. For more information about JSTOR, please contact support@jstor.org.

The New Social Order

The day of new life, new opportunities is at hand. It is already apparent that the schools are to be called upon to play a more important part in the social preparation than ever before. New responsibilities are being thrust upon them, more is being demanded of them. All around the world, it is to the schools that the reconstructionists are turning for assistance.

Fortunately the schools are ready. Even before the war a social program had been outlined, a new education projected. For many years teaching has been climbing to higher levels. * * * * * One of the facts about the future which stands out more and more clearly as time goes on is that the work of the world will be carried forward by the trained worker — in education no less than in other fields of human endeavor.

—FRANK CODY